

Absolutely — notification is a very useful polysemy/family target because your passage uses it here:

> “Apparently, however, thousands of students found it painfully relatable. Within hours, the notifications on my phone were exploding so rapidly that I could barely read them.”

Here notifications means automatic alerts from apps or the phone telling the writer that something new had happened, such as likes, comments, shares, or other activity.

Word family: notify / notification / notified / notifier / notification-related forms

Base verb: notify

Noun: notification

Past / participle: notified

Person/system noun: notifier (較少見 , technical/context-dependent)

Part of speech: verb (動詞) / noun (名詞)

Major domains:

- * phone/app alerts
- * formal notice
- * legal/administrative communication
- * workplace/system alerts
- * public health
- * computing/software
- * emergency warnings
- * delivery/logistics
- * subscriptions/accounts
- * passive construction be notified of/about
- * fixed phrases such as push notification, notification settings, advance notification

Meaning in your passage: notification = phone/app alert — 手機通知 ; 應用程式提示

Your sentence:

> “the notifications on my phone were exploding so rapidly...”

Here notifications means:

> automatic alerts generated by the phone or social-media app to inform the writer about new likes, comments, messages, shares, or other activity.

繁體中文 :

手機或應用程式自動顯示的提示 , 通知使用者有新的互動、訊息或活動 ; 通知 / 提示

BE. REMINDER VS NOTIFICATION

61. notification ≠ reminder

A crucial distinction.

notification

= tells you something has happened / changed / is available.

reminder

= prompts you not to forget something.

Example:

> “New comment notification”

> = 新留言通知

> “Meeting reminder”

> = 會議提醒

A reminder can be delivered as a notification, but the concepts differ.

BF. NOTIFICATION VS ALERT

62. notification vs alert

notification

= broad informational message.

alert

= message demanding attention, often because something is urgent/important.

> notification

> = 通知 > security alert

> = 安全警報

An alert is often one type of notification.

BG. NOTIFICATION VS MESSAGE

63. notification vs message

message

= actual communication content.

notification

= tells you that there is new information/message/activity.

Example:

> message: "See you at 5."

> notification: "You have a new message."

Very important digital distinction.

BH. NOTIFICATION VS POP-UP

64. notification vs pop-up

notification

= information alert.

pop-up

= interface element/window that suddenly appears.

A notification may appear as:

* banner

* badge

* pop-up

But:

> not every pop-up is a notification.

BI. NOTIFICATION VS BANNER

notification

= informational event/message.

banner

= one visual presentation format.

Same distinction:

> content/event vs display form.

BJ. NOTIFICATION VS BADGE

notification

= alert itself.

badge

= small number/dot indicating unread/new items.

One badge may summarize many notifications.

BK. NOTIFICATION VS EMAIL

email

= communication channel/message format.

notification

= purpose/function.

You can receive:

> a notification by email.

So an email can function as a notification.

BL. NOTIFICATION VS NOTICE

This is very important.

notification

= act/message of informing, often process-oriented or technical.

notice

= formal written announcement, warning, or information displayed/sent.

Examples:

> email notification

> = 電郵通知

> eviction notice

> = 遷出通知

> notice on the door

> = 門上的告示

They overlap, especially formal contexts.

BM. NOTIFICATION VS INFORMING

notification

noun describing formal/system process.

informing general act of telling someone.

> notification is usually more formal, standardized, or system-generated.

BN. NOTIFY VS INFORM

65. notify vs inform

notify

= formally/directly tell someone about a specific event/change.

inform

= provide information more generally.

> notify customers of delay

> = 通知客戶延誤 > inform customers about the new policy

> = 向客戶提供政策資訊

Notify often feels more event-triggered or procedural.

BO. NOTIFY VS TELL

tell

= everyday broad verb.

notify

= more formal/systematic.

> “Tell me when you arrive.”

> = 到了告訴我。

> “Notify security if the alarm sounds.”

> = 警報響時通知保安。

BP. NOTIFY VS WARN

notify

= tell.

warn

= tell about danger/problem in advance or urgently.

> notify residents of closure

> = 通知道路封閉

> warn residents of danger

> = 警告居民有危險

A warning can be delivered through a notification.

BQ. NOTIFY VS ANNOUNCE

notify

= tell specific affected person(s).

announce

= make information public/broadly known.

Example:

- > company announces policy change publicly
- > company notifies employees individually

This distinction is very useful.

BR. NOTIFY VS REPORT

notify

= tell someone that something happened.

report

= formally provide details/information about it.

Example:

- > notify management of incident
- > = 通知管理層有事故
- > report the incident
- > = 正式呈報事故詳情

BS. NOTIFICATION VS ANNOUNCEMENT

announcement

= public declaration.

notification

= targeted or system-generated informing.

> school announcement

> = 學校廣播 / 公布

> app notification

> = 應用程式通知

BT. NOTIFICATION VS APPROVAL

Again, very important administratively:

notification

= you must tell authority.

approval

= authority must agree before you proceed.

These must never be treated as synonyms.

BU. NOTIFICATION VS CONSENT

notification

= telling someone.

consent

= getting their agreement.

Example:

> “You will be notified.”

does not mean:

> you will be asked for permission.

BV. NOTIFICATION VS CONFIRMATION

notification

= tells you something happened.

confirmation

= verifies that something is definitely true/completed.

Example:

> booking notification

> = booking-related alert > booking confirmation

> = proof your booking is accepted

Close but distinct.

BW. NOTIFICATION VS RECEIPT

notification

= alerts you.

receipt

= proof of transaction/payment.

A payment notification tells you payment happened; a receipt documents it.

BX. NOTIFICATION VS UPDATE

notification

= alert format.

update

= new information itself.

> “I received a notification about an update.”

The notification delivers news of the update.

BY. NOTIFICATION VS REMINDER — SOURCE PASSAGE CONNECTION

In your passage, the repeated phone notifications are not reminders.

They are:

> signals of new social-media activity.

This matters because each one functions as a fresh:

> stimulus

leading the writer to:

> check the phone again.

That links to the earlier words:

* buzz

* dependence

* response

BZ. NOTIFICATION OVERLOAD

66. notification overload = 通知過量 ; 通知轟炸

A useful modern concept.

Practice 121

> “She suffered from notification overload.”

「她受到*通知過量 / 通知轟炸*困擾。」

Practice 149

> “He cleared all notifications.”

「他清除了所有通知。」

Practice 150

> “Clearing notifications does not delete the underlying messages.”

「清除通知並不等於刪除相關訊息。」

Important digital distinction.

CN. TAP / OPEN A NOTIFICATION

81. tap/open a notification = 點擊 / 打開通知

Practice 151

> “She tapped the notification.”

「她點了一下通知。」

Practice 152

> “Opening the notification took her directly to the comment.”

「打開通知後，她直接進入那則留言。」

CO. NOTIFICATION COUNT

82. notification count = 通知數量

Practice 153

> “The notification count rose into the hundreds.”

「通知數量升到數百則。」

Practice 154

> “A high notification count can feel overwhelming.”

「大量通知可能令人感到吃不消。」

Very passage-relevant.

CP. NOTIFICATION FEED / STREAM

83. notification feed = 通知動態；通知串流

Practice 155

> “The app has a central notification feed.”

「應用程式設有中央通知動態頁。」

Practice 156

> “The feed lists recent activity.”

「通知動態會列出最近活動。」

CQ. NOTIFICATION AS ATTENTION SIGNAL

84. notification = cue that demands attention — 注意力提示訊號

This is a pragmatic extension especially important in your passage.

Practice 157

> “Every notification became a cue to check the phone.”

「每一則通知都變成一個促使他查看手機的注意力訊號。」

Practice 158

> “Notifications are designed to attract attention.”

「通知的設計目的之一就是吸引使用者注意。」

This is still the digital sense, but the functional role is important.

CR. NOTIFICATION AS REWARD SIGNAL

85. notification = signal of possible social reward — 潛在社交獎勵提示

A psychological interpretation, not a separate dictionary sense.

Practice 159

> “A notification may signal a new like or comment.”

「一則通知可能代表有新的讚或留言。」

Practice 160

> “The uncertainty of each notification can encourage repeated checking.”

「每則通知內容的不確定性可能會促使人反覆查看手機。」

> “The contract sets a thirty-day notification period.”

「合約規定三十天的通知期。」

Practice 170

> “The notification period must be observed.”

「必須遵守通知期限。」

CX. IMPORTANT DISTINCTIONS

notification vs notice

notification

= act/message/system of informing.

notice

= formal announcement/document or posted information.

Digital:

> notification

Formal physical/legal:

> notice

though overlap exists.

notification vs alert

notification

= broad informational alert.

alert

= stronger emphasis on urgency/importance.

A like notification is not necessarily an alert.

A security alert usually demands attention.

notification vs reminder

notification

= tells you about new activity/event.

reminder

= tells you not to forget an upcoming/unfinished thing.

Very important.

notification vs message

message

= actual content someone sends.

notification

= signal telling you that content/activity exists.

> message = 「今晚七點見」

> notification = 「你有一則新訊息」 notification vs announcement

notification

= usually targeted.

announcement

= usually broad/public.

A school may:

> announce closure publicly and:

> notify parents individually.

notify vs inform

notify

= event-specific, more formal/procedural.

inform

= general provision of information.

Example:

> notify you of result

> = 通知你結果

> inform you about policy

> = 向你說明政策 notify vs tell

tell

= broad everyday verb.

notify

= more formal/systematic.

> tell me later

> = 稍後告訴我 > notify me immediately

> = 立即通知我 notify vs warn notify

= inform.

warn

= inform specifically about danger/problem.

A warning can come in notification form.

notification vs confirmation

notification

= alerts you something happened.

confirmation

= confirms it is officially accepted/completed.

Example:

> payment notification

> vs

> payment confirmation

Close but not identical.

notification vs response

You just curated response.

notification

= incoming signal/information telling you something happened.

response

= what you do after receiving it.

In the passage:

- > notification buzz
- > → writer checks phone
- > → behavioural response

This is a very useful sequence.

notification vs buzz

You curated buzz.

buzz

= physical sound/vibration.

notification

= informational event/alert.

One notification may produce:

- * a buzz
- * a sound
- * a banner
- * no sound at all

So:

- > buzz = sensory signal
- > notification = informational alert

notification vs comment

A comment is:

- > user-generated content.

A notification is:

- > system-generated alert telling you a comment exists.

Excellent passage-specific distinction.

notification vs update

update

= new information/change.

notification

= alert delivering or announcing that update.

notification vs badge

badge

= visual indicator.

notification

= underlying alert/event.

A red badge may represent 20 notifications.

notification vs pop-up

pop-up

= display format/window.

notification

= purpose/content.

Not every pop-up is a notification.

mute vs disable notifications

mute

= notification may still arrive/display, but without sound/vibration.

disable

= stop notification delivery/display altogether, depending on system.

Very useful tech distinction.

clear notifications vs delete messages clear notifications

= remove alerts from notification interface.

delete messages

= remove the underlying content.

Clearing one does not necessarily delete the other.

notification vs legal notice

In everyday English they can overlap, but:

notification

often emphasizes the act/process of informing.

notice

often emphasizes the document/required period.

Example:

> notification of termination

> termination notice

Both may be possible, but phrasing depends on legal context.

notifiable vs noticeable

A useful spelling/meaning trap.

notifiable

= must be officially reported.

noticeable

= easy to notice.

> notifiable disease

> = 法定須呈報疾病 > noticeable change

> = 明顯變化

Completely different.

notification vs notifier

notification

= information/alert.

notifier

= agent/system that sends it.

The latter is much less common outside technical contexts.

notification in your passage

Your sentence says:

> “Within hours, the notifications on my phone were exploding so rapidly that I could barely read them.”

The exact meaning is:

*notifications = 社交媒體應用程式不斷向作者手機發出的即時提示，表示又有人按讚、留言、分享或與影片互動。 ******

The verb phrase:

> “notifications were exploding” is figurative.

It means:

> the number/frequency of notifications was increasing extremely rapidly not that the phone was literally exploding.

Natural translation:

> 「幾個小時內，手機通知就以驚人的速度瘋狂湧入，多得我幾乎來不及看。」

This word is especially important in the passage because notifications become the bridge between:

> online attention

> → phone buzzes

> → checking behaviour

> → dependence

> → anxiety
