Passage recap

> “I understand why some parents worry when they hear that a class is ‘doing drama’.”

Here:

parent = a mother, father, or adult responsible for raising a child

Best Traditional Chinese:

* 家長

* 父母

Natural contextual translation:

我明白為甚麼有些家長一聽到課堂正在「做戲劇活動」便會感到擔心。

Passage MCQ-ready meaning

parent

= a mother or father, or more broadly an adult responsible for raising a child

家長；父母之一

The biggest learner split is between the human and technical/business meanings:

> a student's parent

> → 學生的家長*

but:

> parent company

> → 母公司

> parent node

> → 父節點

> parent folder

> → 上層資料夾

> parent organism

> → 親本

> parent compound

> → 母體化合物

And the verb/family forms are also high value:

> parent a child

> → 養育 / 教養孩子

> parenting

> → 育兒 / 親職

> parental consent

> → 家長同意

> parenthood

> → 為人父母

So in the passage, parent stays in the straightforward family/school guardian branch, while the wider lexical family develops the powerful metaphor “parent = source, controller, or higher-level origin of something else.”
