DA. PRICE SOMETHING OUT OF REACH — FAMILY NOTE

Expressions such as:

> price consumers out of ownership > high prices can make something unaffordable

We do not need to treat these as separate lexical senses.

DK. FAIR VALUE VS FAIR PRICE

fair price

= broadly reasonable market/deal price.

fair value

= may have formal accounting/finance definitions.

Do not automatically treat them as identical.

DL. PRICE VS COST

114. price vs cost

One of the most important distinctions in your passage.

price

= amount seller asks/buyer pays to acquire something.

cost

= broader amount/resources sacrificed to produce, own, operate, or obtain it.

Example:

> purchase price

> = 購車價 > running cost

> = 使用成本

Your passage deliberately separates:

> higher initial price

> from:

> future expenses / running costs.

DM. PRICE VS VALUE

115. price vs value

price

= actual monetary amount.

value

= worth/usefulness/benefit.

Something can have:

* low price but high value

* high price but poor value

So:

> expensive ≠ valuable automatically.

DN. PRICE VS WORTH

price

= amount demanded/paid.

worth

= judged value.

> “The price is $10,000.”

> “It is worth $8,000.”

These may differ.

DO. PRICE VS CHARGE

You just curated charge.

price

= amount associated with the product/service itself.

charge

= specific amount billed to someone, especially for service/use.

Compare:

> car price

> = 車價 > charging charge / service charge

> = 充電費 / 服務費

A company:

> sets a price > and > charges the customer that amount.

DP. PRICE VS FEE

116. price vs fee

price

= payment for goods/services broadly.

fee

= payment especially for:

- * professional services
- * membership
- * administration
- * admission

> car price

> legal fee

Not normally:

> car fee

DQ. PRICE VS FARE

117. price vs fare

fare

= price paid for transport journey.

> bus fare

> = 巴士車資 > ticket price

> = 票價

Fare is specialized to transport.

DR. PRICE VS RATE

118. price vs rate

price

= total or unit monetary amount for something.

rate

= amount charged per unit/time.

> hotel room price = $1,000 total/night listing > hourly rate = $500/hour

In energy:

> electricity rate

> often means:

> price per kWh.

DS. PRICE VS TARIFF

tariff

= structured schedule/rate of charges.

price

= actual amount/value.

A charging network may publish:

> tariff

which determines:

> final price.

DT. PRICE VS QUOTE / QUOTATION

119. price vs quote

price

= amount.

quote

= seller's offered estimate/statement of price.

> mechanic gives a quote

> quote lists a price

A quote can change before final transaction.

DU. PRICE VS ESTIMATE

estimate

= approximate expected amount.

price

= actual/quoted selling amount.

> estimated repair cost

> ≠ final price necessarily.

DV. PRICE VS BID

price

= broad value.

bid

= amount offered by buyer.

The winning bid may become the sale price.

DW. PRICE VS OFFER

offer

= proposed buying/selling terms.

price

= monetary component of those terms.

An offer can include:

- * price
- * conditions
- * timing

DX. PRICE VS BUDGET

price

= what the item costs.

budget

= what buyer can/wants to spend.

Your passage:

> price may stretch household budget.

This distinction is central.

DY. PRICE VS AFFORDABILITY

price

= objective amount.

affordability

= whether buyer can reasonably bear that amount.

Same price can be:

* affordable for one household

* unaffordable for another.

DZ. PRICE VS PAYMENT

price

= total amount agreed for the product.

payment

= transfer/instalment of money.

A car may have:

> price = $300,000

> monthly payment = $5,000

Not the same.

EA. PRICE VS DEPOSIT

price

= total acquisition amount.

deposit

= initial partial payment.

A deposit forms only part of the price.

EB. PRICE VS TOTAL COST OF OWNERSHIP

120. price vs total cost of ownership

price

= upfront acquisition amount.

total cost of ownership

= acquisition price + operation + maintenance + insurance + repairs + depreciation etc.

This is perhaps the most important economic contrast in your EV passage.

A car can have:

> higher purchase price

but:

> lower total cost of ownership.

EC. PRICE VS RESALE VALUE

price

= what you pay now.

resale value

= what you may recover later.

So net ownership economics depend on both.

ED. PRICE VS DEPRECIATION

price

= acquisition amount.

depreciation

= decline in asset value over time.

A high initial price plus rapid depreciation can make ownership expensive.

EE. PRICELESS VS FREE

121. priceless ≠ free

priceless

= too valuable to assign a meaningful price / extremely precious.

free

= costs no money.

Example:

> priceless painting

> = 無價畫作 > free ticket

> = 免費門票

Classic learner trap.

EF. PRICEY VS OVERPRICED

122. pricey vs overpriced

pricey

= simply quite expensive.

overpriced

= more expensive than it reasonably should be.

> pricey restaurant

> = 頗貴 > overpriced restaurant

> = 貴得不值

Important evaluative distinction.

EG. EXPENSIVE VS HIGH-PRICED VS OVERPRICED

expensive

= costs a lot.

high-priced

= objectively sold at high price.

overpriced

= price judged excessive relative to value.

So:

> expensive does not automatically mean overpriced.

EH. CHEAP VS LOW-PRICED

cheap can mean:

1. low in price
2. low in quality / inferior-looking low-priced simply:

= low in price

So low-priced is more neutral.

EI. PRICING VS COSTING

123. pricing vs costing pricing

= deciding what customer will pay.

costing

= calculating what producing/providing something costs.

Business flow:

> calculate cost

> → decide margin/strategy

> → set price

Different sides of economics.

EJ. PRICE VS VALUATION

price

= actual/quoted amount.

valuation

= estimated economic worth.

A property may have:

> valuation of $5 million

> but sell at:

> price of $4.7 million.

EK. MARKET PRICE VS INTRINSIC VALUE

In finance:

market price

= what asset currently trades for.

intrinsic value

= analyst/model estimate of underlying worth.

They may differ significantly.

EL. PRICE AS MARKET SIGNAL

Prices do more than tell buyers how much to pay.

Economically, prices can convey information about:

- * scarcity
- * demand
- * supply
- * preferences

So:

> high price

may act as:

> a market signal

This remains an economic function of the core monetary sense rather than a separate lexical meaning.

EM. "THE PRICE IS RIGHT"

124. if the price is right = 如果價錢合適 / 合理

A common expression.

Practice 225

> "I would consider the electric model if the price is right."

「如果價錢合適，我會考慮這款電動車。」

Practice 226

> "Almost anything will sell if the price is right."

「只要價格合適，很多東西都賣得出去。」

EN. "WHAT PRICE...?" — LOWER-PRIORITY RHETORICAL USE

Older/formal expressions such as:

> “What price progress?”

can rhetorically mean:

> 「進步的代價是甚麼？」

This is real but relatively literary/journalistic, so lower priority.

EO. PRICE IN YOUR PASSAGE

Your paragraph says:

> “The initial price is often higher than that of a petrol car, while future expenses remain uncertain...”

This creates a crucial contrast:

price

= upfront amount paid to acquire the car

later expenses

= future ownership costs

The passage then lists:

- * battery replacement
- * resale value
- * insurance
- * specialist repairs

So the writer's point is:

> consumers do not judge an electric car only by environmental benefit; they compare its purchase price plus future financial uncertainty with a familiar petrol car.

EP. CORE SEMANTIC MAP

The central modern concept is:

> what must be given in exchange for something

That produces two major semantic branches:

Monetary

- > price of a car
- > share price
- > retail price

Figurative sacrifice

- > price of success
- > pay the price

Then specialist extensions develop around monetary valuation:

verb

- > price a product

marketing

- > pricing strategy

finance

- > market price / strike price

betting

- > price = odds

valuation

- > put a price on something

So price is conceptually unified more than it first appears:

> what must be given / what something is valued at in an exchange.

EQ. PRONUNCIATION

price /praɪs/priced /praɪst/pricing /ˈpraɪsɪŋ/

Spelling note:

> price → pricing

The final e is dropped before ing.
