Important distinction 1: push vs pull

Core literal contrast:

push

apply force away from yourself.

apply force towards yourself.

> push the door open

> 把門推開

> pull the door open

> 把門拉開

Many metaphorical contrasts develop from these basic directions.

Important distinction 2: push vs press

push

apply force to move something.

press

apply pressure against a surface, often without substantial movement.

With buttons, both can work:

- > push the button
- > press the button

But press is especially common in instructions.

Important distinction 3: push vs shove

push

neutral broad term.

shove

stronger, rougher, often sudden.

- > He pushed me aside.
- > 他把我推到旁邊。
- > He shoved me aside.
- > 他粗暴地把我猛推開。

Important distinction 4: push vs nudge

push

can involve substantial force.

nudge

small gentle push, often to attract attention or encourage subtly.

- > push the door
- > 推門
- > nudge someone's arm
- > 輕碰 / 輕推某人的手臂

Important distinction 5: push for vs ask for

This is central to your passage.

ask for

simply request.

push for

actively and persistently advocate.

> ask for more time

> 要求更多時間

> push for more time

> 積極爭取更多時間

Push for is stronger.

Important distinction 6: push for vs insist on

Your passage actually contrasts them.

push for speed

actively advocate speed.

insist on caution

state firmly that caution is necessary and refuse to compromise easily.

So:

> push for = 積極爭取

> insist on = 堅持必須

Important distinction 7: push for vs demand

push for

strong advocacy, often sustained.

demand

make a strong direct requirement.

> workers pushed for higher pay

> 工人積極爭取加薪 > workers demanded higher pay

> 工人明確要求加薪

Demand often sounds more forceful and explicit.

Important distinction 8: push for vs campaign for campaign for organized public effort over time.

push for

broader and can happen:

* privately,

* internally,

* politically,

* commercially.

A department can push for a faster launch without conducting a campaign.

Important distinction 9: push someone to vs push someone into push someone to do X strongly encourage/pressure them.

push someone into doing X pressure them so strongly that they actually enter an action or situation.

> push him to apply

> 催促他申請

> push him into accepting

> 逼他接受

The second usually feels more coercive.

Important distinction 10: push vs motivate motivate

give someone reason or desire to act.

push

apply stronger pressure or encouragement.

A person can be internally motivated without anyone pushing them.

Important distinction 11: push yourself vs work hard work hard put in effort.

push yourself

deliberately go beyond your ordinary comfort or effort level.

So push yourself emphasizes self-imposed pressure.

Important distinction 12: push ahead vs proceed

From your previous word:

proceed

formal/neutral continue.

push ahead

continue actively despite resistance or difficulty.

> The project proceeded.

> 項目繼續進行。

> The company pushed ahead with the project.

> 公司排除阻力繼續積極推進項目。

Important distinction 13: push forward vs move forward

move forward

neutral progression.

push forward

more energetic; may imply effort against obstacles.

Important distinction 14: push through vs get through

get through successfully finish/survive/pass.

push through

achieve it by determined effort or pressure.

> get through the workload

> 完成工作量

> push through the workload

> 咬緊牙關完成工作

Important distinction 15: push through a proposal

This often suggests:

obtaining approval despite opposition or obstacles

It can have a negative implication of rushing or forcing something through.

Important distinction 16: push back = resist vs delay

Two very important meanings:

Resistance:

> Employees pushed back against the plan.

> 員工反對計劃。

Delay:

> We pushed the meeting back.

> 我們把會議延後。

Do not merge them.

Important distinction 17: pushback noun

Usually:

> strong pushback from staff

= 來自員工的強烈反對

But in aviation, pushback also means:

aircraft being pushed backwards away from the gate.

That is an established specialist sense.

18. aircraft pushback — 飛機後推

Practice 1

> The aircraft is ready for pushback.

飛機已準備進行後推。

Practice 2

> Pushback began five minutes late.

飛機後推程序遲了五分鐘開始。

MCQ-ready definition:

pushback = 飛機從登機閘位被拖車向後推出的程序

Important distinction 19: push up vs rise

rise

something goes up.

push X up

some cause makes it go up.

> prices rose

> 價格上升

> demand pushed prices up

> 需求推高價格

This causal structure is extremely useful.

Important distinction 20: push down vs fall

Same distinction:

> costs fell

> 成本下降

> competition pushed costs down

> 競爭壓低成本

Important distinction 21: push into a market vs enter a market

enter a market

neutral.

push into a market

emphasizes energetic/aggressive expansion.

> enter the European market

> 進入歐洲市場 > push into the European market

> 積極進軍歐洲市場

Important distinction 22: push a product vs market a product

market a product

broad business activity of positioning and promotion.

push a product

more forcefully try to increase sales, sometimes with a mildly negative “hard sell” feeling.

Important distinction 23: pushy vs ambitious ambitious strongly wants success.

pushy

tries too aggressively to get what they want.

> ambitious employee

> 有抱負的員工

> pushy employee

> 過分進取、咄咄逼人的員工

Pushy is usually negative.

Important distinction 24: pushy vs assertive

assertive

confidently expresses needs/opinions while respecting others.

pushy

goes too far and pressures others.

So:

> assertive = often positive

> pushy = usually negative

Important distinction 25: pusher

The general derivational meaning is:

someone/something that pushes.

But in ordinary modern English:

> drug pusher

is a particularly established use meaning an illegal drug seller.

The bare noun pusher can therefore sound negative or context-specific and is not the normal word for someone who merely “encourages progress.”

19. drug pusher — 非法毒品販子

Practice 1

> Police arrested a suspected drug pusher.

警方拘捕了一名涉嫌販毒的人。

Practice 2

> Pusher can refer informally to someone who sells illegal drugs.

pusher 在非正式語境中可指販毒者。

This is an established lexicalized sense.

Important distinction 26: push the limits vs break the rules

push the limits

go as far as possible, perhaps testing boundaries.

break the rules

actually violate rules.

Pushing boundaries does not necessarily mean violating them.

Important distinction 27: push the envelope

Similar to push the boundaries, but especially common for:

- * innovation,
- * design,
- * technology,
- * performance.

It implies going beyond conventional expectations.

Important distinction 28: push your luck

This is not simply:

> try hard.

It means:

continue taking risks or asking for more when you have already been fortunate

Important distinction 29: a push vs a shove

As nouns:

> a push

> 一次一般推動

> a shove

> 一次較粗暴或猛烈的推動

Important distinction 30: a push = campaign vs physical action

Compare:

> Give the door a push.

> 推門一下。

> There is a push for reform.

> 目前有人大力*推動改革*。

Same noun, completely different scale and abstraction.

Important distinction 31: final push

This can be:

* literal military advance,

* project/work effort,

* campaign effort.

Its core idea is:

the last concentrated effort needed to reach a goal

Important distinction 32: push factor vs pull factor

push factor

makes someone want to leave.

pull factor

attracts someone to another place.

Example:

> unemployment = push > better jobs elsewhere = pull

This distinction is central in migration studies.

Important distinction 33: push notification vs ordinary message

push notification

the system proactively delivers it to your device.

message

the actual communication content.

A message may arrive through a push notification, but they are not synonymous.

Important distinction 34: push vs pull in computing

In simplified computing terms:

push

sender actively sends data/changes outward.

pull

receiver actively retrieves them.

In Git:

> push commits to remote

> 把提交推到遠端 > pull changes from remote

> 從遠端拉取變更

Important distinction 35: push code vs commit code

From your earlier commit family:

commit

record changes in version history locally/repository history.

push

send those commits to a remote repository.

So:

> commit first → push later

They are not the same operation.

Important distinction 36: push in childbirth

Here push has returned to a highly physical sense:

use muscular force to help move the baby through the birth canal

It is not metaphorical encouragement.

Important distinction 37: when push comes to shove — 到真正關鍵時刻；逼不得已時

A major idiom.

Practice 1

> When push comes to shove, the manager will have to make a decision.

到了真正關鍵時刻，經理就必須作決定。

Practice 2

> He complains a lot, but when push comes to shove, he usually helps.

他經常抱怨，但真到緊要關頭時通常還是會幫忙。

MCQ-ready definition:

when push comes to shove = 當情況真正變得困難，必須採取實際行動或作決定時

Important distinction 38: at a push — 勉強；必要時最多

Especially BrE.

Practice 1

> The room can hold twenty people, or twenty-five at a push.

房間可以容納二十人，*勉強最多*二十五人。

Practice 2

> I could finish it today at a push.

如果真的有需要，我今天*勉強可以完成*。

MCQ-ready definition:

at a push = BrE: 在勉強、極限或不得已的情況下

Important distinction 39: push off — 離開；滾開

Besides the literal “push away from a surface”, push off has an informal BrE use:

leave / go away

Practice 1

> We should push off before it gets dark.

天黑前我們應該*離開*。

Practice 2

> “Push off!” can mean “Go away!”

Push off! 可以表示「走開！」

The imperative can sound rude.

Important distinction 40: push in your passage

The sentence is:

> a product team may push for speed, while the compliance team insists on caution.

The product team is not physically pushing anything.

Nor does push for speed simply mean:

> “prefer speed.”

It means:

the product team actively argues that the project should move faster, and tries to make that priority influence the team's decision

This is why the sentence creates a clash:

> product → push for speed

> compliance → insist on caution

Both groups have legitimate priorities, but poor communication can turn those priorities into delay and conflict.

Family-extension note

The push family has a very wide but coherent semantic network built around:

applying force so that something moves away or moves further

That literal idea extends metaphorically into:

1. physical force

* push a door

* push someone aside

2. movement through obstacles

- * push through a crowd
- * push your way through

3. encouraging/pressuring people

- * push someone to improve
- * push someone into doing something

4. advocating

- * push for speed
- * push for reform

5. promoting ideas

- * push an agenda
- * push a message

6. commercial selling

- * push a product
- * sales push

7. causing numerical change

- * push prices up
- * push costs down

8. continuing despite resistance

- * push ahead
- * push on
- * push through

9. resistance

- * push back
- * pushback

10. exclusion/control

- * push someone out
- * push someone around

11. innovation

- * push boundaries
- * push the envelope

12. risk

- * push your luck

13. organized effort

- * a push for change
- * final push

14. expansion

- * push into a new market

15. military advance

- * push forward
- * a military push

16. childbirth

- * push during labour

17. exercise

- * push-up

18. migration theory

- * push factor

19. technology

- * push notification
- * push data

20. software development

- * push code/changes

21. fixed idioms

* when push comes to shove

* at a push

For your passage, the exact branch is:

push for X = actively and persistently advocate or seek X

For your original sentence

> For instance, a product team may push for speed, while the compliance team insists on caution; without proper communication, these differing aims can delay the entire project.

Here:

*push for speed = 產品團隊不只是「喜歡快一點」，而是積極主張加快進度，力圖令整個項目把速度視為較高優先事項

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 例如，產品團隊可能會*力求加快進度 / 積極主張速度優先*，而合規團隊則堅持應該謹慎行事；如果缺乏適當溝通，這些不同目標可能會拖延整個項目。

The cleanest contrast is:

- > prefer speed = 比較喜歡快
- > ask for speed = 要求加快
- > push for speed = 積極爭取、持續推動加快
- > demand speed = 強硬要求加快
- > insist on caution = 堅持謹慎是不可妥協的要求

So push here carries exactly the sense of active pressure toward a preferred priority, which is why it fits the interdepartmental conflict so well.
