

Absolutely — revision is an excellent Tier 1 target, especially because your passage uses the BrE exam-study sense:

> “...balancing a sandwich and revision notes in one hand...”

Here revision means study/review done before an exam. But the word also has a major second meaning: changing or improving a text, plan, rule, estimate, etc. That contrast is especially useful because it is strongly dialect-sensitive.

Important distinction: revision — BrE exam sense vs AmE

This is one of the most important points.

BrE

> “I’m doing revision.”

= 我正在溫習。

> “I need to revise chemistry.”

= 我要溫習化學。

AmE

For exam study, speakers more often say:

> “I’m studying.”

> “I’m reviewing.”

In AmE, revise/revision more strongly suggests:

> 修改 / 修訂

So this word is especially useful for dialect awareness.

Important distinction: revision vs review

In BrE education:

revision

= exam study/review.

review

broader:

= look at something again to evaluate or remember it.

> revision for an exam

> = 考試溫習

> review a report

> = 審視報告

In AmE, review is often the natural word for exam preparation.

Important distinction: revise vs edit

revise

= reconsider and make substantive changes to improve content.

edit

= broader work on text, including wording, grammar, structure, formatting.

> revise an argument

> = 修改論證本身

> edit grammar and punctuation

> = 編輯文法和標點

There is overlap, but revise often implies rethinking content.

Important distinction: revise vs proofread

revise

= change ideas/content/structure.

proofread

= check final text for small errors such as spelling, grammar, punctuation.

> revise the essay

> = 修改文章內容 / 結構

> proofread the essay

> = 校對錯字、文法等

Important distinction: revision vs correction

correction

= fixing something that is wrong.

revision

= broader; may improve/update something even if it was not technically wrong.

> correction of an error

> = 更正錯誤

> revision of a policy

> = 修訂政策

Important distinction: revision vs update

update

= bring something up to date with new information.

revision

= make changes after reconsideration.

A revision may include updates, but not every revision is merely an update.

Important distinction: revision vs rewrite

revision

= modify an existing version.

rewrite

= write again, often substantially.

> revise a paragraph

> = 修改一段

> rewrite a paragraph

> = 重寫一段

A rewrite is usually more extensive.

Important distinction: revision — process vs a revision — change/version

Uncountable/process:

> “The report needs revision.”

= 報告需要修訂。

Countable:

> “We made three revisions.”

= 我們作了三次 / 三項修訂。

Version:

> “the latest revision”

= 最新修訂版

Important countability distinction.

Important distinction: revision notes in your passage

Your phrase:

> “revision notes”

does not mean:

> 「修改過的筆記」

It means:

> 考試前用來溫習的筆記

This is an excellent learner trap because the other major meaning of revision is “修改 / 修訂”.

Important distinction: revise for an exam vs revise an essay

Exam:

> “I revised for the exam.”

= 我為考試溫習。

Writing:

> “I revised my essay.”

= 我修改了文章。

Same verb, different object/construction and meaning.

Excellent MCQ material.

Important distinction: revise + subject vs revise + document

BrE:

> revise maths

> = 溫習數學

General/formal:

> revise the plan

> = 修訂計劃

Context decides the entire meaning.
