feeling that something is good enough or has met your expectations.

> I'm happy today.

> 我今天很開心。

> I'm satisfied with my work.

> 我對自己的工作感到滿意。

You can be satisfied without feeling especially happy.

Important distinction 2: satisfied vs pleased

They overlap strongly.

pleased

often more emotional and immediate.

satisfied

often emphasizes that expectations or standards have been met.

> pleased with the compliment

> 因讚美而高興

> satisfied with the quality

> 對品質感到滿意

Important distinction 3: satisfied vs content

satisfied

something has met your expectation.

content

> satisfied with the result

> 對結果滿意

> content with life

> 安於目前生活

Important distinction 4: satisfied vs satisfying

Person:

> I am satisfied.

Thing:

> The task is satisfying.

Think:

* -ed → feeling

* -ing → causes the feeling

Important distinction 5: satisfied vs satisfactory

satisfied

describes a person's reaction.

> The customer was satisfied.

顧客感到滿意。

satisfactory

describes something that is acceptable/good enough.

> The service was satisfactory.

服務達到令人接受的水平。

Important distinction 6: satisfactory does not necessarily mean excellent

This is a common trap.

satisfactory

= acceptable; meets requirements.

It can sound much weaker than:

* excellent

* outstanding

* impressive

So:

> satisfactory performance

may simply mean:

表現合格 / 達到基本要求

Important distinction 7: satisfy a need vs satisfy a person

satisfy a need

meet a requirement/desire.

satisfy a person

make the person pleased.

> The meal satisfied my hunger.

> 這頓飯令我不再餓。

> The meal satisfied me.

> 這頓飯令我感到滿意。

Related, but not identical.

Important distinction 8: satisfy requirements vs meet requirements

These overlap almost completely.

meet requirements

very common and neutral.

satisfy requirements

slightly more formal.

Both mean:

符合要求

Important distinction 9: satisfy demand vs meet demand

Again, very close.

> satisfy demand
> meet demand

Both mean 滿足需求, though meet demand is especially common in business contexts.

Important distinction 10: be satisfied that vs be satisfied with

satisfied with + noun

pleased with something.

> satisfied with my work > 對我的工作滿意

satisfied that + clause

convinced that something is true.

> satisfied that the work was completed correctly > 確信工作已正確完成

This is a major grammar + meaning distinction.

Important distinction 11: satisfy curiosity vs answer a question

answer a question

provide an answer.

satisfy curiosity

remove someone's desire to know more.

An answer may exist but still fail to satisfy someone's curiosity.

Important distinction 12: satisfaction vs pleasure

pleasure

enjoyment.

satisfaction

feeling that something has been successfully completed or fulfilled.

> pleasure from a holiday

> 假期帶來的愉快

> satisfaction from finishing difficult work

> 完成困難工作帶來的滿足感

Important distinction 13: dissatisfied vs unsatisfactory

dissatisfied

person feels unhappy with something.

> dissatisfied customers

> 不滿的顧客

unsatisfactory

thing fails to meet expectations.

> unsatisfactory service

> 不理想的服務

Same pattern as:

> satisfied person

> satisfactory result

Important distinction 14: satisfy in mathematics

Here it does not mean “make the equation happy.”

It means:

make the mathematical statement true

> $x = 2$ satisfies the equation.

= 把 2 代入後，方程式成立。

For your original sentence

> ...because in reality I was stressed, exhausted, and rarely satisfied with my work.

Here:

satisfied with my work = 覺得自己的工作質素達到自己的期望，因此對成果感到滿意

The natural Traditional Chinese is:

> 現實是我總是很大壓力、很疲累，而且對自己的表現也很少真正滿意。

The key contrast is:

> satisfied = 我覺得結果達標，所以我滿意

> satisfying = 這件事本身令人有滿足感

> satisfactory = 結果達到可接受 / 要求的水平

For this passage, satisfied is exactly about the speaker's personal evaluation of the quality of their own work.
