Important distinction 1: sight vs vision

sight

can mean:

- * ability to see
- * something seen
- * visual range

vision

can mean:

- * eyesight
- * imagined future
- * visual perception

For physical ability, both can overlap:

- > lose your sight
- > lose your vision

But vision has more abstract extensions.

Important distinction 2: sight vs eyesight

eyesight

specifically physical visual ability.

sight

broader.

- > poor eyesight

視力差

> a beautiful sight

美麗景象

So eyesight cannot replace sight in every context.

Important distinction 3: sight vs view

sight

something you see.

view

what can be seen from a particular place or angle.

> a strange sight

奇怪景象

> a sea view

海景

Important distinction 4: sight vs scene

sight

focuses on what is visually seen.

scene

can describe a whole setting, situation, or event.

> a shocking sight

令人震驚的景象

> the scene of the accident

意外現場

Important distinction 5: sight vs look

sight

noun connected with seeing.

look

can mean:

- * the act of looking
- * appearance

> at first sight

乍看之下

> at first look possible but less idiomatic here.

So at first sight is the standard fixed expression.

Important distinction 6: at first sight vs first impression

Very close, but:

at first sight

focuses on the moment of first seeing.

first impression

focuses on the opinion formed initially.

> At first sight, he looked serious.

第一眼看去，他很嚴肅。

> My first impression was that he was serious.

我的第一印象是他很嚴肅。

Important distinction 7: in sight vs within sight

in sight

visible.

within sight

close enough to be seen.

Very similar, but within sight often emphasizes distance/range.

Important distinction 8: out of sight vs out of view

out of sight

not visible.

out of view

also not visible, often because of angle/position.

Out of sight is more idiomatic and has stronger figurative extensions.

Important distinction 9: catch sight of vs see see general.

catch sight of

usually sudden, brief, or accidental.

> I saw him.

我看見他。

> I caught sight of him.

我突然瞥見他。

Important distinction 10: sight vs sighting

sight

the thing seen or the ability to see.

sighting

an event where someone sees something notable.

> a beautiful sight

美麗景象

> a UFO sighting

UFO 目擊事件

Important distinction 11: the sights vs sightseeing

the sights

the attractions.

sightseeing

the activity of visiting them.

> see the sights

參觀景點

> go sightseeing

去觀光

Important distinction 12: lose sight of literal vs figurative

Literal

> We lost sight of the boat.

我們看不見那艘船了。

Figurative

> Don't lose sight of your goal.

不要忘記你的目標。

The figurative meaning develops naturally from the visual idea.

Family-extension note

Sight has several strong modern branches:

1. visual ability

- * sight
- * eyesight

2. visual range

- * in sight
- * out of sight
- * lose sight of

3. something seen

- * a beautiful sight
- * a strange sight

4. tourist attractions

- * the sights
- * sightseeing

5. act/event of seeing

- * at the sight of
- * sighting

6. verb

- * sight land
- * sight a rare bird

7. figurative goals/awareness

- * lose sight of
- * set your sights on

8. fixed expressions

- * at first sight
- * love at first sight

The original passage uses a fixed expression built on the act of seeing sense.

Master comparison

| sight (device) | 瞄準器 | aiming device |

For your original sentence

> He usually wore a plain shirt, dark trousers, and a pair of glasses that made him look serious at first sight.

Here:

at first sight = 第一眼看上去 ; 乍看之下

The phrase describes the speaker's initial visual impression of Mr Chan before seeing what he was actually like when teaching.

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 那副眼鏡令他第一眼看上去很嚴肅。

The contrast matters:

> at first sight → serious-looking > once he started teaching → much more lively

So the passage is using sight in the fixed expression at first sight, not the meanings 視力, 景象, or 名勝.
