Important distinction: struggle vs difficulty

difficulty

= the problem itself.

struggle

= either:

* the difficult experience,

* or the effort made to overcome it.

> “Maths is a difficulty for him.”

> = 數學對他來說是一項困難。

> “His struggle with maths lasted years.”

> = 他多年來一直努力應付數學上的困難。

Struggle carries more effort and resistance.

Important distinction: struggle vs challenge

You already have challenge mapped.

challenge

= difficult task/situation that tests ability.

struggle

= the hard effort and difficulty while dealing with it.

> = 挑戰本身

> struggle

> = 應付挑戰時的艱難掙扎

Important distinction: struggle vs fight

fight

can be:

* physical combat,

* argument,

* organised opposition.

struggle

often emphasizes:

* sustained difficulty,

* effort,

* resistance.

> fight someone

> = 跟某人打架

> struggle with someone

> = 跟某人扭打 / 拉扯

> struggle with a problem

> = 艱難應付問題

So struggle is broader for hardship.

Important distinction: struggle vs battle

You already curated battle.

battle

often suggests:

- * clear opponent,
- * conflict,
- * strong confrontation.

struggle

emphasizes:

- * effort under difficulty,
- * often without a clear opponent.

> battle against disease

> = 與疾病抗戰

> struggle with daily tasks

> = 艱難應付日常事情

They overlap, but struggle feels more effort-centered.

Important distinction: struggle vs strive strive

= make great effort toward a goal.

struggle

= make great effort because something is difficult.

> strive for excellence

> = 努力追求卓越

> struggle to pass the exam

> = 很吃力地爭取合格

Strive sounds more purposeful/formal and less negative.

Important distinction: struggle vs suffer

suffer

= experience pain or hardship.

struggle

= actively try to cope with or overcome difficulty.

> suffer from anxiety

> = 受焦慮困擾

> struggle with anxiety

> = 艱難地應付焦慮

Important difference:

struggle implies effort, while suffer mainly emphasizes experiencing hardship.

Important distinction: struggle vs cope

cope

= manage a difficult situation successfully enough.

struggle

= have difficulty managing it.

> coping with stress

> = 應付壓力

> struggling with stress

> = 應付壓力很吃力

So they almost point to opposite degrees of success.

Important distinction: struggle with vs struggle against struggle with + issue/task

= have difficulty dealing with it > struggle with maths

> = 數學方面有困難

struggle against + force/problem

= actively resist it > struggle against discrimination

> = 對抗歧視

Important construction contrast.

Important distinction: struggle for vs struggle with struggle for X

= 努力爭取 X

> struggle for freedom

> = 爭取自由

struggle with X

= 艱難應付 X

> struggle with homework

> = 做功課很吃力

Completely different direction:

* for = desired goal

* with = difficulty/problem

Important distinction: struggle to do vs try to do

try to do

= attempt.

struggle to do

= attempt with substantial difficulty.

> “I tried to understand it.”

> = 我嘗試理解。

> “I struggled to understand it.”

> = 我很吃力才能理解。

So struggle adds difficulty.

Important distinction: struggling student

This usually means:

> a student who is having persistent difficulty with schoolwork

not:

> a student physically fighting.

Natural Chinese:

* 學習有困難的學生

* 學習吃力的學生

Important distinction: daily struggles in your passage

> “daily struggles”

does not mean:

- * physical fights,
- * political struggles,
- * formal competition.

It means:

> the ordinary personal difficulties and pressures students face every day

such as:

- * exam pressure
- * tiredness
