T. NOT SUFFER FOOLS GLADLY

80. not suffer fools gladly — 不耐煩容忍愚蠢 / 無能的人

A major fixed idiom, despite the older grammar inside it.

Practice 1

> She doesn't suffer fools gladly.

她對愚蠢或無能的人很沒有耐性。

Practice 2

> The manager is highly competent but does not suffer fools gladly.

這名經理能力很強，但非常不能容忍愚蠢行為。

MCQ-ready definition:

not suffer fools gladly = 對自己認為愚蠢、無能或浪費時間的人非常沒有耐性

Important:

Here suffer means approximately:

tolerate / put up with

This use survives mainly in this fixed expression.

Important distinction 1: suffer from vs suffer something

This is one of the most important grammar distinctions.

suffer from + condition/problem

> suffer from headaches

> 受頭痛困擾

> teamwork suffers from poor communication

> 團隊合作受溝通不良困擾 suffer + bad event/result

> suffer an injury

> 受傷

> suffer a loss

> 蒙受損失

> suffer defeat

> 遭遇失敗

So:

> from = ongoing cause/problem

> direct object = adverse event/result experienced

Important distinction 2: suffer from illness vs have an illness have asthma

neutral statement of condition.

suffer from asthma

emphasizes that the condition causes difficulty/distress.

Because of this, in respectful health communication, have/live with may sometimes sound more neutral than suffer from, depending on context.

Important distinction 3: suffer from vs be affected by

be affected by

very neutral.

suffer from

normally indicates a negative effect.

> The project was affected by the change.

> could be positive or negative.

> The project suffered from the change.

> clearly negative.

Important distinction 4: suffer vs experience

experience

neutral: something happens to you.

suffer

the event is harmful/unpleasant.

> experience rapid growth > 經歷快速增長

> suffer a serious setback > 遭受重大挫折

You would not normally say:

> suffer rapid growth

unless the growth itself causes problems and the wording is deliberately negative.

Important distinction 5: suffer vs undergo undergo

experience a process/change, neutral or unpleasant:

> undergo surgery > 接受手術

> undergo restructuring > 經歷重組

suffer

emphasizes harm:

> suffer an injury
> 受傷

> suffer losses
> 蒙受損失

Important distinction 6: suffer vs endure

suffer

experience pain/harm.

endure

continue through something unpleasant without giving up.

> suffer pain

> 承受痛苦

> endure pain

> 忍受痛苦

Endure emphasizes stamina/tolerance.

Important distinction 7: suffer vs tolerate tolerate

allow/endure something unpleasant.

suffer

be hurt by it.

> tolerate noise

> 忍受噪音

> suffer from noise pollution

> 受噪音污染困擾

Important distinction 8: suffer vs bear

bear

carry/endure a burden, pain or responsibility.

suffer

experience negative effects.

> bear the burden

> 承擔負擔

> suffer because of the burden

> 因負擔而受苦

Important distinction 9: suffer vs sustain

Especially with injuries/damage:

suffer an injury

very common.

sustain an injury

more formal, common in:

- * news,
- * medical,
- * legal,
- * accident reporting.

Both can mean 受傷.

Important distinction 10: suffer damage vs be damaged

the building suffered damage

建築物遭受損壞。

the building was damaged

建築物受損。

The first treats damage as something experienced; the second directly describes the result.

Important distinction 11: suffer a loss vs lose

lose money

direct everyday verb.

suffer a financial loss

more formal and emphasizes negative impact.

> We lost $10,000.

> 我們損失了一萬元。

> We suffered a $10,000 loss.

> 我們蒙受了一萬元損失。

Important distinction 12: suffer a setback vs fail

fail

not succeed.

suffer a setback

progress is temporarily pushed backward or delayed.

A setback does not necessarily mean final failure.

Important distinction 13: suffer defeat vs lose

lose

ordinary.

suffer defeat

more formal/dramatic.

> the team lost

> 球隊輸了

> the team suffered a heavy defeat

> 球隊慘敗

Important distinction 14: suffer a blow

This can be:

literal:

- > suffer a blow to the head
- > 頭部受到重擊

figurative:

- > suffer a blow to confidence
- > 信心受到打擊

The figurative branch is extremely common.

Important distinction 15: quality suffers

Here suffer does not mean quality “feels pain”.

It means:

quality becomes worse

- > If we rush, quality will suffer.
- > 如果我們趕得太急，質素會下降。

This is closely related to your passage use.

Important distinction 16: performance suffers vs performance declines

performance declines neutral description of downward movement.

performance suffers

suggests something is harming performance.

- > Motivation falls → performance suffers.

Suffer carries stronger adverse-impact meaning.

Important distinction 17: suffer from X vs be plagued by X

suffer from

neutral-to-formal negative effect.

be plagued by much stronger:

> repeatedly troubled by a serious persistent problem.

> project suffers from delays

> 項目受延誤影響

> project is plagued by delays

> 項目長期被延誤問題纏繞

Important distinction 18: suffer from vs struggle with

suffer from

emphasizes harm/problem.

struggle with

emphasizes difficulty coping/dealing with it.

> suffer from anxiety

> 受焦慮困擾

> struggle with anxiety

> 努力應付焦慮問題

Important distinction 19: suffer consequences vs face consequences

face consequences

have consequences ahead / be required to deal with them.

suffer consequences

actually experience negative consequences.

> You may face consequences.

> 你可能要面對後果。

> He suffered the consequences.

> 他真的承受了後果。

Important distinction 20: suffer for X vs suffer from X

suffer from X

X is the harmful condition/problem:

> suffer from insomnia.

suffer for X

X is the reason/cause for which someone pays a price:

> suffer for your mistakes.

Very different prepositions.

Important distinction 21: suffer under X vs suffer from X

suffer under

emphasizes being under a system/person/condition over time:

> suffer under oppressive rule.

suffer from

emphasizes the harmful problem itself:

> suffer from poor leadership.

Both can sometimes fit, but the perspective differs.

Important distinction 22: suffer in silence

This does not merely mean:

> suffer while nobody is making noise.

It is idiomatic:

endure pain/problems without telling people or asking for help

Important distinction 23: suffer through vs get through

get through successfully complete/survive.

suffer through

get through while finding the experience unpleasant or painful.

> get through a long meeting

> 完成 / 捱過長會議

> suffer through a long meeting

> 痛苦地捱完整場會議

Important distinction 24: suffering vs pain

pain

specific physical or emotional sensation.

suffering

broader state of distress that may involve:

* pain,

* loss,

* fear,

* deprivation,

* grief.

Pain can be part of suffering.

Important distinction 25: suffering vs hardship

hardship

difficult living circumstances.

suffering

the distress caused by difficult circumstances.

> financial hardship

> 經濟困難

> suffering caused by poverty

> 貧窮造成的苦難

Important distinction 26: suffering is usually uncountable

Natural:

> much suffering

> unnecessary suffering

> human suffering

Plural sufferings exists, especially in literary/formal descriptions of multiple hardships:

> the sufferings of civilians

but everyday English normally uses uncountable suffering.

Important distinction 27: sufferer vs patient

patient

person receiving medical care.

sufferer

person affected by a disease/symptom, whether receiving treatment or not.

> migraine sufferer

> 偏頭痛患者

may not currently be in a clinic.

Important distinction 28: sufferer can sound condition-focused

Modern health language sometimes prefers:

> people with asthma

> people living with chronic pain

rather than defining people as:

> asthma sufferers.

But sufferer remains common and standard in many contexts.

Important distinction 29: long-suffering vs suffering for a long time

long-suffering

specifically emphasizes patient tolerance.

> long-suffering spouse

> 長期忍耐的伴侶 suffering for a long time

simply means the pain lasts a long time.

Not identical.

Important distinction 30: insufferable vs unbearable

unbearable

too painful/difficult to tolerate.

insufferable

often describes a person/behaviour that is extremely annoying or arrogant.

> unbearable pain

> 難以忍受的疼痛

> insufferable arrogance

> 令人受不了的傲慢

They overlap but collocations differ.

Important distinction 31: insufferable vs intolerable

intolerable

cannot reasonably be accepted or endured.

insufferable

often more personal/emotional:

> extremely irritating.

> intolerable working conditions

> 不可接受的工作環境

> insufferable colleague

> 討厭得令人無法忍受的同事

Important distinction 32: not suffer fools gladly

This uses an older sense of:

> suffer = tolerate

That sense is no longer freely productive in ordinary modern English.

You would normally say:

> tolerate bad behaviour

rather than:

> suffer bad behaviour

But the fixed idiom:

> not suffer fools gladly

remains current.

Important distinction 33: suffer from free-riding in your passage

The sentence is:

> group work often suffers from free-riding, miscommunication and interpersonal tension.

The meaning is not:

> group work “feels pain.”

It is the established figurative pattern:

a system/activity/organisation suffers from a problem

meaning:

> that problem weakens its quality, effectiveness, or success.

Compare:

> a patient suffers from asthma

> 病人受哮喘困擾

> a city suffers from congestion

> 城市受交通擠塞困擾

> teamwork suffers from free-riding

> 團隊合作受搭便車問題影響

The grammar stays the same while the semantic subject changes from:

> a person experiencing distress

to:

> a system experiencing deterioration.

Important distinction 34: suffer vs damage in your passage

From your earlier damage entry:

conflict damages teamwork

衝突損害團隊合作。

Here damage identifies the harmful cause.

teamwork suffers from conflict

團隊合作受到衝突影響。

Here suffer presents teamwork as the thing receiving the negative effect.

So:

> X damages Y

> $\approx$

> Y suffers from X

Very useful structural contrast.

Important distinction 35: suffer vs decline in your passage family

From your earlier decline entry:

> motivation declines

> 動力下降

describes the downward movement.

> motivation suffers because of unfairness

> 動力因不公平而受到打擊

describes negative impact.

Important distinction 36: suffer vs endure in teamwork

> employees suffer from poor leadership

> = bad leadership harms them.

> employees endure poor leadership

> = they continue tolerating it.

So:

suffer = receive harm

endure = tolerate and continue.

Important distinction 37: suffer does not always imply extreme agony

The verb can range from:

very serious:

> suffer severe pain

to fairly ordinary:

> sales suffered slightly

> quality suffered

Therefore, context determines intensity.

Family-extension note

The suffer family has several major modern branches:

1. system negatively affected by a problem

* suffer from poor communication * suffer from free-riding

2. health condition

* suffer from asthma

* suffer from pain

3. personal distress

* suffer emotionally

* suffer greatly

4. experience a harmful event

* suffer an injury

* suffer damage

5. financial/business loss

* suffer losses

* profits suffer

6. setback/defeat

* suffer a setback

* suffer defeat

7. abstract deterioration

* quality suffers

* morale suffers

* reputation suffers

8. consequences

* suffer the consequences

9. reason for suffering

* suffer for your mistakes

* suffer for your beliefs

10. under oppressive conditions

* suffer under

11. harm caused by a person/group

* suffer at the hands of

12. abuse/discrimination/hardship

- * suffer abuse
- * suffer hardship

13. silent endurance

- * suffer in silence

14. endure an unpleasant period

- * suffer through

15. cause pain

- * make someone suffer

16. noun

- * suffering
- * human suffering

17. affected person

- * sufferer

18. patient endurance

- * long-suffering

19. intolerably unpleasant

- * insufferable

20. fixed tolerance idiom

- * not suffer fools gladly

For your passage, the exact branch is:

suffer from X = have one's quality, effectiveness, or condition weakened because X is a persistent problem

For your original sentence

> In conclusion, group work may be unpopular among workers because it often suffers from free-riding, miscommunication and interpersonal tension.

Here:

suffers from = 團隊合作本身因搭便車、溝通失誤和人際緊張等問題而變得較低效、較不公平、較難順利運作

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 總括而言，團隊工作之所以不受員工歡迎，是因為它經常受到搭便車、溝通失誤和人際緊張問題的困擾和負面影響。

The cleanest learner contrast is:

- > have a problem = 有某個問題
- > be affected by a problem = 受到問題影響，語氣中性
- > suffer from a problem = 受到問題的明顯負面影響
- > struggle with a problem = 很難應付問題
- > be plagued by a problem = 長期被嚴重問題纏繞
- > endure a problem = 忍耐並捱過問題

And the most important grammar contrast is:

- > suffer from poor communication = 受溝通不良問題困擾

- > suffer a setback = 遭受挫折
- > suffer the consequences = 承受後果
- > suffer for a mistake = 因錯誤而付出代價
- > suffer under poor leadership = 在差劣領導之下受苦

So in your teamwork passage, suffer is best understood as:

“be harmed in effectiveness or quality by a persistent negative condition.”
