MCQ-ready definition:

overvalue = judge something to be worth more or matter more than it really does

Important distinction 1: value = money vs value = importance

Money

> The value of the car is $20,000.

汽車價值兩萬元。

Importance

> This experience has great value.

這次經歷很有價值。

Same noun, different measurement.

Important distinction 2: value vs price

price

the amount asked/paid.

value

what something is actually considered worth.

> price = 售價

> value = 價值

Something can have:

> a high price but poor value

售價高但不值。

Important distinction 3: value vs cost

cost

how much must be paid/spent.

value

what you receive or what something is worth.

> The cost is low, but the value is high.

成本低，但價值高。

Important distinction 4: value vs worth

These overlap strongly.

value

noun/verb and often more formal or measurable.

worth

commonly adjective/preposition-like:

> The painting is worth $1,000.

這幅畫值一千元。

> the value of the painting

畫作的價值

Important distinction 5: value someone vs like someone like have positive feelings toward someone.

value

regard someone as important and worthwhile.

You may value someone's contribution without personally liking them.

Important distinction 6: value vs appreciate

Very close in interpersonal contexts.

value

emphasizes importance and worth.

appreciate emphasizes recognizing and being thankful for someone's qualities/actions.

> I value your friendship.

我珍惜你的友誼。

> I appreciate your help.

我感謝 / 珍惜你的幫助。

Important distinction 7: feel valued vs feel valuable

Very important.

feel valued

feel that other people appreciate you.

> Employees want to feel valued.

員工希望感到自己被重視。 feel valuable

feel that you are useful or worth a lot.

This is possible, but much less natural for interpersonal appreciation.

Your passage requires:

feel valued

Important distinction 8: valuable vs valued

valuable

has high value.

valued

is appreciated by someone.

> a valuable employee

很有能力 / 價值的員工

> a valued employee

備受重視的員工

These meanings overlap but are not identical.

Important distinction 9: valuable vs invaluable

A classic trap.

valuable

有價值的

invaluable

極有價值的

It does not mean:

> without value

For “without value,” use:

> worthless

> valueless

Important distinction 10: sentimental value vs monetary value

monetary value

how much money something is worth.

sentimental value

how emotionally meaningful it is.

The scrapbook in your passage is a perfect example:

> low monetary value

> high sentimental value

Important distinction 11: good value vs valuable

good value

worth the money paid.

valuable

worth a lot, useful, or important.

> a cheap meal can be good value

便宜又划算

but not necessarily:

> financially valuable

很值錢

Important distinction 12: value for money vs cheap

cheap

low price.

good value for money

good quality/quantity relative to price.

Something expensive can still offer excellent value for money.

Important distinction 13: values vs value

Singular value

worth / importance / numerical quantity.

Plural values

often moral principles and beliefs.

> the value of education

教育的價值

> personal values

個人價值觀

Important distinction 14: value someone vs value something at X

Appreciation

> I value my family.

我珍惜家人。

Estimation

> The house was valued at $1 million.

房屋估值一百萬元。

Same verb, radically different senses.

Important distinction 15: face value literal vs figurative

Literal

> face value of a bond

債券面值

Figurative

> take his words at face value

按表面意思相信他的話

The figurative sense means without looking beneath the surface.

Important distinction 16: devalue vs undervalue

devalue

cause value to fall / treat as less valuable.

undervalue

judge it below its real value.

> The currency was devalued.

貨幣被貶值。

> The house was undervalued.

房屋估值過低。

Important distinction 17: undervalue vs underestimate

undervalue

focuses on worth/importance.

underestimate

focuses on amount, difficulty, ability, scale, etc.

> undervalue someone's contribution

低估某人的貢獻價值

> underestimate the time needed

低估所需時間

Important distinction 18: valuation vs evaluation

valuation

especially estimating monetary worth.

evaluation

judging quality, effectiveness, performance, etc.

> property valuation

物業估價

> course evaluation

課程評估

Family-extension note

Value has several major modern branches:

1. financial worth

* market value

- * monetary value
- * property value
- * valuation

2. importance / usefulness

- * practical value
- * educational value
- * of value

3. emotional significance

- * sentimental value

4. appreciate / cherish

- * value someone
- * feel valued
- * highly valued

5. numerical quantity

- * numerical value
- * absolute value

6. beliefs / principles

- * values
- * core values
- * personal values

7. commercial usefulness

- * good value
- * value for money
- * value-added

8. judging worth

- * devalue
- * undervalue
- * overvalue

For your passage, the crucial branch is:

value someone = regard them as important and worthy of care and therefore:

feel valued = 感到自己被珍惜、被重視

For your original sentence

> Very often, they are the ones that make people feel seen, valued, and remembered.

Here:

valued = 被重視、被珍惜、被認為是重要的人

The three words form a nice emotional sequence:

* seen → 別人真正注意到你、理解你

* valued → 別人認為你重要、值得珍惜

* remembered → 別人沒有忘記你和你們共同經歷的事情

A natural Traditional Chinese rendering is:

> 很多時候，真正好的禮物，是那些能讓人感到被看見、被珍惜、被記住的東西。

For this passage, 「被珍惜」 is especially natural and emotionally warm, while 「被重視」 is the cleanest dictionary-style meaning.
