> vehicle for fraud

> = 欺詐工具

So the evaluation comes from:

> what the vehicle is used for.

BY. VEHICULAR VS AUTOMOTIVE

68. vehicular vs automotive

vehicular

= relating broadly to vehicles/traffic.

automotive

= relating specifically to motor vehicles and the auto industry.

Compare:

> vehicular traffic

> = 車流

> automotive industry

> = 汽車工業

Do not freely substitute them.

BZ. VEHICULAR VS TRAFFIC

vehicular

adjective:

= 車輛的

traffic

noun/modifier:

= 交通流量 / 交通

> vehicular traffic

> = 車流

This phrase sounds formal/technical.

CA. VEHICLE VS VEHICULAR

vehicle

noun:

> electric vehicle

> = 電動車

vehicular

adjective:

> vehicular emissions

> = 車輛排放

You generally cannot say:

> vehicle emissions is wrong? No—it is actually also common.

But:

> vehicular emissions is more formal.

So both may occur, with register differences.

CB. VEHICLE IN YOUR PASSAGE

Your paragraph says:

> “Although research indicates that electric vehicles are greener than petrol cars, less than 3% of vehicles sold worldwide in 2020 were electric.”

Here both uses are literal:

> electric vehicles

> = 電動車 / 電動車輛

> vehicles sold worldwide

> = 全球售出的車輛

The writer chooses vehicle rather than only car because it is a broader, more formal transport-policy term.

Later the passage narrows repeatedly to:

> electric cars

because the argument mainly discusses ordinary drivers and household purchases.

So there is a useful register contrast:

> vehicle = broader/formal/policy/technical

> car = narrower/everyday
