Depending on context:

In everyday usage, terminology can overlap.

Important distinction: voice vs sound

sound

= any audible phenomenon.

voice

= sound produced by a person speaking/singing.

> sound of traffic

> = 交通聲

> her voice

> = 她的嗓音

So every voice is a sound, but not every sound is a voice.

Important distinction: voice vs accent

voice

= overall sound of the person's speech.

accent

= characteristic pronunciation associated with region/language/social background.

Two people can have:

* similar accents

* very different voices

Important distinction: voice vs tone

voice

= the speaker's sound generally.

tone

= quality/attitude conveyed at a particular moment.

> deep voice

> = 低沉嗓音

> angry tone

> = 憤怒語氣

You already have tense, etc., but this contrast is especially useful.

Important distinction: voice vs pronunciation

voice

= personal vocal sound.

pronunciation

= how particular words/sounds are articulated.

Someone may criticise:

> your voice

without criticising:

> your pronunciation

Different concepts.

Important distinction: voice vs opinion

opinion

= the actual belief/view.

voice

= ability/opportunity to express it.

> have an opinion

> = 有意見

> have a voice

> = 有發言權 / 有機會讓意見被聽見

Important distinction: voice vs vote

vote

= formal choice in an election/decision.

voice

= broader ability to express/influence.

Someone may have:

> a voice in a discussion

without having:

> a formal vote

Important distinction: voice — literal vs figurative

Literal:

> “I recognised her voice.”

= 我認得她的聲音。

Figurative:

> “Students need a voice.”

= 學生需要發言權。

Strong MCQ contrast.

Important distinction: voice — person vs writing

Person:

> “She has a soft voice.”

= 她的聲音柔和。

Writing:

> “She has a distinctive voice.”

= 她有鮮明的文風 / 表達風格。

Same word, entirely different channel of expression.

Important distinction: active/passive voice

Here voice has nothing to do with actual speaking.

> active voice

> = 主動語態

> passive voice

> = 被動語態

This is grammatical terminology describing how an action relates to the grammatical subject.

Important distinction: voice — noun vs verb

Noun:

> “Her voice was quiet.”

= 她的聲音很小。

Verb:

> “She voiced her concern.”

= 她表達了憂慮。

The verb means:

> give verbal expression to not simply “make a sound”.

Important distinction: voice vs vocal

voice

noun:

> a voice

> = 聲音 / 發言權

vocal adjective:

> vocal training

> = 聲樂訓練

or figuratively:

> vocal critic

> = 公開直言批評的人

This figurative vocal is a valuable extension.

Important distinction: voiced vs voiceless in phonetics

Touch your throat:

voiced sound

= vocal cords vibrate

voiceless sound

= vocal cords do not vibrate

For example:

* /z/ voiced

* /s/ voiceless

These terms are technical and unrelated to whether somebody has “a voice” socially.

Important distinction: voice in your passage

> “criticised my appearance, my voice or even the way I walked”

Here voice definitely does not mean:

- * opinion,
- * writing style,
- * grammatical voice,
- * social influence.

It means:

> the audible quality of the author’s speaking voice

The commenters are criticising a personal physical/vocal characteristic.

Family-extension sweep
