EZ. PASSAGE RECAP

> “Through role reversal, we began to see how one person’s ‘joke’ might be another person’s wound.”

Here:

wound

= a deep emotional injury caused by another person’s actions or words

Best Traditional Chinese:

* 心靈創傷

* 心傷

* 情感上的傷口

* contextually: 一道心靈上的傷

Natural contextual translation:

透過角色互換，我們開始明白，一個人眼中的「玩笑」，在另一個人心中可能是一道傷口。

The writer deliberately uses the physical word wound metaphorically.

A joke does not literally cut the victim’s skin, but it may:

* humiliate,

* exclude,

* embarrass,

* undermine self-worth,

* remain painful afterward.

So the metaphor is:

> physical wound

> → damaged tissue that hurts and needs time to heal

becomes:

> emotional wound

> → damaged feelings or psychological well-being that may also take time to heal.

Passage MCQ-ready meaning

wound

= a lasting emotional or psychological injury

心傷；心靈創傷

The biggest learner split is:

> a deep wound

> → 深傷口

> gunshot wound

> → 槍傷

but figuratively:

> emotional wound

> → 情感創傷

> old wounds

> → 過去的心傷 / 舊痛

> wounded pride

> → 受傷的自尊

> reopen old wounds

> → 重新揭開舊傷疤

> rub salt into the wound

> → 在傷口上撒鹽 / 雪上加霜

> lick one's wounds

> → 受挫後療傷

And the most important spelling/pronunciation trap is completely separate:

> wound = injury

> → 傷口

versus:

> wound = past of wind

> → 纏繞了 / 上了發條 / 蜿蜒而行

So:

> The knife caused a wound.

> → 刀造成了傷口。

but:

> The rope wound around the pole.

> → 繩子纏繞在柱子上。

Same spelling, completely different pronunciation, grammar, and meaning.

In the passage, the metaphor is especially powerful because it rejects the idea that cyberbullying is harmless simply because someone calls it a “joke”: the person making the joke may experience amusement, while the person receiving it may experience something closer to a lasting psychological injury.
